• Do your homework when building the Budget to make it as accurate as possible.

• Start making your schedule as early in the planning process as possible, and fill in the blanks as you go!

• Arrival time at the venue for (1) You; (2) Speakers or performers; (3) Volunteers
• Time doors of the room open for guests to enter

Communication & Teamwork

• Marketing/Invitations: What is your Goal for Attendance? How will you advertise? How will you track RSVPS? Email, Social Media, Word of Mouth?

• How much time have you allowed prior to the event date?
Communication & Teamwork

• Planning Meetings: Weekly meetings? Email updates?

• Role Assignments: Have the expectations of each member been clearly defined? Who is the main contact that the members report to? Make sure all members are on time and understand their roles.

Have the main contact be the communicator of all details to the event planner.

It’s important that the main contact is free to look at the “Big Picture” day of the event.

Delegate responsibilities to other members and volunteers to free up your time!

The more organized you are, the smoother your event will go! Take thorough notes during each meeting and communicate frequently with others on your planning team and in your organization.

Plan ahead – so you can enjoy your event! There’s always the chance for a “hiccup” here and there, but if you think through all details, you should be able to relax and watch the event go well.
